WHAT'S IN A NAME?
(Benson's Plaster Is Pain's Master.)

In the days of 'wild cat' money in the West, the Ames shovels were used as currency. They were as stable as gold; their price did not vary a cent in twenty years. The very name of Oliver Ames & Son was a synonym for honesty. It was current all over the world.

On the same principle Benson's Porous Plaster is the universal standard external remedy. To say it is a "good" plaster does not describe it; it is the best possible plaster. For every disease in which an external remedy is available, Benson's Plaster is used almost as a matter of course.

Benson's Plaster quickly relieves and cures where other modes of treatment are either exasperatingly slow or have no good effect whatever. Coughs, colds, lumbago, kidney trouble, rheumatism, lame back, etc., are at once benefited and soon cured.

Capsicum, Strengthening and Belladonna plasters have none of the curative virtues of Benson's. More than 5,000 physicians and druggists have commended Benson's Plaster as a remedy in which the public may have implicit confidence; while, in a comparative test with other plasters, Benson's has received fifty-five highest awards. Beware of substitutes and cheap imitations.

For sale by all Druggists or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

PASSING OF THE GRAND ARMY.

All Schemes for Perpetuating the Famous Organization Have Been Abandoned, and It Will Die With Its Heroes.

At the rate of 1,000 a month the members of the Grand Army of the Republic are being carried to their graves, and every post in the country has held its flag at half-mast during the year just ended. Statistics just compiled show that the death rate has recently increased at an alarming rate, and already plans are under consideration for the merger of some of the smaller posts and to provide additional comforts for the needy, who practically rely upon the organization for support. Only ten years ago the Grand Army was all that its name implies. It mustered 400,489 men at roll-call, and every one of them could and did turn out on parade. To-day the roster shows only 276,662 names, and the list numbers thousands of helpless old men who have attended their last encampment and have participated in their last parade.

"All plans for the perpetuation of the Grand Army have been abandoned," said Adjutant General Rober B. Wallace recently, when discussing the future of the organization. "Some of the veterans may be here 20 years from now, but not many," he continued, "and the number living today speaks well for the character of the men admitted to the army in '61 and during the four years that followed. It took a good, strong man to go through the war and some of the finest specimens of American manhood followed the flag those days. In the Department of Pennsylvania we numbered 46,115 in 1890, but to-day the records show only 29,818 left.

The death rate will increase from year to year until finally only a handful of men will be left to represent the Grand Army. It is a sort of last man's club now. At every meeting of the big Posts the death of some comrade is reported and it reminds one of a battle in the night where the soldiers fall all around us but we do not see the enemy or know who will be the next to drop. Those who are in their graves are beyond our help, but the time has come when some adequate provision must be made for the living.

EDITORS OPPOSE LIBEL BILLS.

Would Rob the People of Constitutional Privileges.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the State Democratic Editorial Association in Harrisburg last Tuesday at which action was taken against the Grady and Voorhees libel bills, William P. Hastings, of Milton, secretary of the association, was directed to address a circular letter to members urging them to express to the Senators and Representatives from their respective districts their disapproval of the measures. The following was also adopted:

We emphatically disapprove of the bill of Senator Grady, which would repeal the act of 1897, and we equally oppose and condemn the measure relating to libel introduced by Representative Voorhees. The repealing bill of Senator Grady would restore the unfair law which controlled prior to July 1, 1897.

The Voorhees bill is unjust and impracticable, and designed to stop the press from free and fair criticism of derelict public officials or of unfit candidates for public place. It is framed in defiance of the Constitution, which guarantees the liberty of the press, "the free communication of thoughts and opinions," one of the invaluable rights of men.

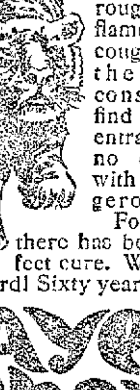
We find both these bills to have been originated by partisan managers for the purpose of intimidating and muzzling the press, and to insure to a corrupt and powerful machine security from popular judgment.

"MAMMA, I heard somebody to-day say that matches were made in heaven."

"I believe that is true, Willie."

"Well, do they want matches if there's going to be no night there?"—Australasian.

Crouching



In every cough there lurks, like a crouching tiger, the probabilities of consumption. The throat and lungs become rough and inflamed from coughing and the germs of consumption find an easy entrance. Take no chances with the dangerous foe. For 60 years there has been a perfect cure. What a record! Sixty years of cures.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

soothes and heals the wounded throat and lungs. You escape an attack of consumption with all its terrible suffering and uncertain results.

There is nothing so bad for the throat and lungs as coughing.

A 25c. bottle will cure an ordinary cough; harder coughs will need a 50c. size; the dollar bottle is cheapest in the long run.

"One of my sons was spitting blood with a high fever and was very ill. We could hardly see any signs of life in him. The doctors did him no good. But one bottle of your Cherry Pectoral cured him and saved his life." C. G. ANDERSON, Nov. 10, 1898. Pukwana, S. Dak.

Write the Doctor. If you have any complaint whatever and desire the best medical advice, write the Doctor freely. Address DR. J. C. AYER, Lowell, Mass.

RARE OLD ALBUM OF AUTOGRAPHS.

AN HISTORICAL REGISTER FOUND IN HAGERSTOWN—A WAR STORY IN ITSELF.

Autograph collectors are now crazy to secure originals of Queen Victoria's signature, and although the Queen has been known to have given a number of autographs to favored Americans, but few have been offered for sale in the past, and fewer still will be offered in the future. Very naturally at this time should there be considerable of a demand for these autographs, and any possessor of one desirous of making a sale could command a fancy price.

At the same time, there are thousands of autographs right here in Philadelphia which no amount of money could purchase. And they are not the signatures of sovereigns, either. All the money in our city could not purchase even one of the books bearing the names of visitors to Independence Hall. The same is true of the old registers of one or two of the Philadelphia hotels. One of the oldest registers of the Continental bears the name of the Prince of Wales during his visit to this city in 1860. Another register has the signature of General Grant when President. Another autograph of recent years, and which would enrich any collection, is that of Earl Li Hung Chang during his memorable visit here in 1895.

While pages could be written about the distinguished men and women, Americans and foreigners, who have affixed their signatures to our hotel registers, there is one hotel register in the State of Maryland which, for its collection of signatures, makes it one of the most valuable in the country. It is a rare collection in itself, and to tell the stories of the men named therein would fill hundreds of volumes.

Former State Representative John H. Fow, and one of the foremost lawyers of the Philadelphia Bar, had the pleasure of looking over the valuable old relic last summer, and as but few people, autograph collectors included, know of its preservation, the story is worth retelling at this time.

This is the story as told by John Fow:

"Forty years have rolled away since the time when the Potomac, from Ball's Bluff to Harper's Ferry and Cumberland was the danger line over which the "Angel of Death" hovered for many years, some time winding his way to the fair fields of Pennsylvania, and then with a sudden rush down the valleys of Virginia to the James, and then back again, leaving everywhere death and desolation. In nearly every town in the section overrun by the contending armies events took place that to-day are looked upon, not as commonplace events that are so often told by the fireside to the casual visitor, but as epochs in their local history, that are just as important to them as some great event affecting the nation at large.

"While running over this 'Border Land' last summer, I came across a hotel register that is historical. It is the register of the old Washington Hotel, at Hagerstown, and the names upon it give the information very accurately as to the ebb and flow of the tide of rebellion as it rushed North, and then went back to the Southland. One day the register would contain the names of officers connected with the Confederate army, the next those of the Union army, and one can almost imagine seeing the juicy steak that was broiled for the breakfast of a Confederate Colonel being eaten by a Yankee Captain, while the 'Confed' was hurrying across the Potomac to escape capture. Yet that is what actually occurred, for we find that on Saturday, the 7th day of June, 1862, there arrived at the hotel and registered Colonel Carnot Posey, of the 16th Mississippi, and that on Sunday morning, the 8th, Captain Charles H. T. Collis, of the Pennsylvania Zouaves D'Afrique, arrived, and in addition to his breakfast was charged on the register twenty-five cents for one bottle of ale. Our friend Collis at that time was attached to Bank's division, which was fighting 'Stonewall' Jackson in the Shenandoah valley, while McClellan was hammering at the gates of Richmond. I suppose that breakfast and the bottle of ale tasted better to Charlie than any Clover Club banquet that he has ever attended.

"These were times when the loyal citizens of Philadelphia, irrespective of their social condition, took up arms in defense of the Union. While some took their tents and bivouaced in the open fields, we find that the city troop was of more delicate mould and built on finer lines, for the register shows that on Monday, the 12th day of August, 1861, the following members of the Troop arrived and took up their quarters at this hotel: Captain Thomas James, Lieutenant Camac, Sergeant Smith, M. Edward Rodgers, Edwin L. Reakirt, J. H. Caswell, W. S. Davis, George Cochran, W. R. Angler, James West, Jr., Dr. Liebinger, Charles L. Lenning, J. R. Paxton, Clifford Pemberton, A. J. Pemberton, Fairman Rogers, Edward Khite, Horace J. Mitchell, Edward Lowber, W. Harry Merritt, W. P. Brinton, Joseph P. Brinton, J. Middleton, D. W. Riddle, John Agen, Emlen Carpenter, C. F. Lenning, Jacob Caswell, J. H. Hazeltine, R. Wharton Bickley and W. F. Blanchard. What a time they must have had, and what a night around the wassail bowl, if their feats as trenchermen at the old Philadelphia Club and the Union League are criterions to go by! Some of those whose names are mentioned have gone over the divide, and others still remain among us, no doubt remembering fondly the pic nic they had down the Shenandoah Valley as three months' men in Uncle Sam's army.

"On Friday, August 11, 1861, Hannibal Hamlin, who was then Vice-President of the United States, stopped at the hotel for his dinner, and on Wednesday, August 20, 1863, we find the name on register of the immortal Lincoln. What a story could be written between the lines on that book from the day on which, on that August day in 1862, Lincoln wrote his name, back to the page when, on Thursday, June 30, 1859, John Brown wrote his name, along with that of Isaac Smith and sons, of New York—men whose 'souls are marching on,' as evidenced by the almost universal freedom of man! And one can imagine that November day in '59, when Colonel Robert E. Lee led the United States marines in the attack on the engine house at Harper's Ferry, that resulted in the capture of Brown and his colleagues, and their trial and execution afterwards. It was the striking of the flint that led to all of that which brought these men in after years to the Washington Hotel at Hagerstown.

"On June 18, 1861, when the newspapers of Pennsylvania were edited on strict party lines, we find the name of a man on this register who in after years entered the field of journalism and became one of it's bright and shining lights—Alexander K. McClure, who registered along with T. F. Kennedy, of Chambersburg. As "Aleck" at that time lived near the border, perhaps he was on the lookout for barn-burners. On the 20th day of the same month, a man who then had two legs, and who never had a thought at that time of being the Governor of Pennsylvania, or a Judge in one of its higher Courts, wrote his name—James A. Beaver. Two days afterward, on Saturday, the 22d, we find that a young fellow who then was but twenty-four years of age, and who never had any idea of becoming the Lieutenant-Governor of Pennsylvania, or a General in its militia, or a factor in its politics, signed his name—J. P. S. Gobin. On the Monday following, the 24th, he was followed by Winfield Scott, the General of the army, who, like our friend Charlie Collis, was also charged twenty-five cents for a bottle of ale. On the 26th of the same month, that sterling editorial writer, now of the Philadelphia Record, John H. Filler, wrote his name as a private in the 13th or 15th Pennsylvania Regiment, the number of the regiment being nearly obliterated. On the 26th of August, 1862, 'Reynolds,' who laid down his life at Gettysburg, and whose name will ever be revered, and whose monument stands on the north plaza of the City Hall, took his dinner at the hotel. And hither also came and registered followers of the 'lost cause,' and especially in the latter part of June and the early part of July, 1863, when Longstreet and Lee, Wood and Hill, Heth and Picket, Stuart and Early, rushed forward into Pennsylvania, only to be hurled back, broken and dispirited, never to return again. We find that our genial friend, ex-Judge Elcock, was the Provost Marshal of Hagerstown and I have no doubt made many a poor fellow pay his fine at the 'Bar' before he was released.

"This book is considered by its owner as an album of autographs very valuable. Unlike the one at Willard's, at Washington, which contained the names only of Union soldiers, this one, as I have stated contains those of both armies, and during its period of usefulness was never in any way injured by the men on either side, and never was it used as a vehicle to convey their contempt or resentment for one another. To-day it exists only as a reminder of the times when brave and valiant deeds of arms, that never had been nor will be surpassed, were performed by men engaged in the greatest fratricidal strife that was ever witnessed."

Who wouldn't be an autograph collector if one could secure this album of autographs as a beginning?—Phila. Evening Telegraph.

HE KNEW.

Said the fat black to the lean black:

"Why doan' you 'gratulate me, Brudder Johnsing?"

"Whut fo' I 'gratulate you?" said Brudder Johnsing.

"Whut fer you 'gratulate me! Why, man, kase I done mar'd de Widder Jeff'son."

"You is—you dun mar'd de Widder Jeff'son?" squeaked out the lean one.

"I sho' is dun mar'd dat lady," said the fat one, with an air of great satisfaction.

"Dan I does 'gratulate you wif my whole heart."

The two separated, when the lean one turned to a knot of white gentlemen who had been interested and amused auditors of the conversation and remarked:

"Yas, I 'gratulate him! Haw, haw, haw! He, he! I sho' does. He's de wus enemy I has, an I cert'inly 'gratulates. Why, boss," he said confidentially, singling out one of the spectators, "I wuz mar'd to dat 'oman for a year myself. Yes, I sho' do 'gratulate dat man." And he moved off toward Market street, chuckling and muttering to himself.—Ex.

To Be Prepared

For war is the surest way for this nation to maintain peace. That is the opinion of the wisest statesman. It is equally true that to be prepared for spring is the best way to avoid the peculiar dangers of the season. This is a lesson multitudes are learning, and at this time, when the blood is sure to be loaded with impurities and to be weak and sluggish, the millions begin to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies, enriches and vitalizes the blood, expels all disease germs, creates a good appetite, gives strength and energy and puts the whole system in a healthy condition, preventing pneumonia, fevers, and other dangerous diseases which are liable to attack a weakened system.

A Game of Chaff.

THE great house loomed darkly before the young man who paused for a moment at the iron gates. Then he stepped forward briskly, and, passing around the mansion, rang the bell at the side door. It was almost immediately answered by a young woman, who put her finger to her lips as she ushered him in.

"Please be very careful," she said. "The family are so fussy. Come this way."

She took him into an apartment that might have been the breakfast room and motioned him toward a chair.

"Can't I shake hands with you?" he asked. "It seems like an age since we parted."

"Thank you," she said and gave him her hand. "It was just two weeks ago to-day, if that can be considered an age."

"Thank you for remembering the day," he gravely said.

"I will admit," said the girl, with a little blush, "that it was quite an episode in my life. I'd never had such an opportunity before."

"No," he said, with a slightly rising inflection. He looked at her with a curious expression. She was a pretty girl, a very pretty girl, and, though her hair was smoothed into plainness and surmounted by a simple white cap, its beauty and luster seemed brightened by this attempt at concealing them. Her gown was plain, too, and over it she wore a white apron.

"Yes," she said, and her inflection took the opposite direction. And she in turn looked at him. He was a man worth looking at—well knit, well featured and well spoken. "Some men," she shortly added, "are easily deceived."

"Some deceptions are preferable to the truth," he said. "But pray go on; you have something to tell me."

"Yes," said the girl. "No doubt you have guessed it. You saw me at the seaside resort for those few days. The glamour of the place dazed you. You took appearances for realities."

"They were such charming appearances," he said.

"Please don't interrupt," she cried with another little blush. You saw me with Miss Ainslie's aunt. You took me for Miss Ainslie, and I let you deceive yourself. I am only the dear old lady's companion. I am only Miss Ainslie's companion. One moment. Miss Ainslie showed me your note asking the privilege of calling. She suspected that I knew what it meant. I confessed. I told her the whole story—how I let you think me a great heiress and how I led you on. She advised me to write and tell you to call"—

"At the side door of course," said the man.

"Of course at the side door," exclaimed the girl. "I couldn't ask you here on the footing of the family guests. I wouldn't have asked you here at all, but Miss Ainslie counseled it. She said it was my duty to undeceive you. That is all, I think. Good night."

She stood up as she spoke the last words and moved toward the door. But the man did not stir.

"The evening is young yet," he said, "and short calls disagree with me. Pray, sit down. I, too, came here this evening to make confession. I was not the only one deceived."

"What do you mean?" she asked as she resumed her chair.

"I mean," she replied, "that I represented myself to you in what you must have regarded as a rather favorable light."

"I think," she said, "that you gave me the impression that you were a person of some prominence."

There was a little silence.

"I fancy there must be something in the air of the average resort that encourages these fanciful deceptions," he said. "We seem to long to be something other than what we really are. And yet I am very glad to-night to know the truth."

"May I ask why?" said the girl.

"I was about to tell you," he replied. "You see, that as the petted heiress, Grace Ainslie, you seemed as far above me as a star. I was mad to write to you to day, but now it's different. You are nearer my social level. I do not have to storm the bastion of wealth to reach you."

"That's rather pretty," said the girl. "And you are not disappointed?"

"No," said the man. "I am glad."

"Glad that I am a dependent instead of an heiress?"

"Glad for my own sake, yes. And now may I ask your name?"

"M-my name?" stammered the girl. "Why should I tell you?"

"Do as you please about it," said the man. "It will be easy to give you another."

"And may I ask what yours is?" queried the girl demurely.

"A truce to names," he said. "They count for nothing to-night."

"And yet I'm foolishly particular regarding them," she said, with a smile.

"My name is well enough," he said, "but let it go. There are other things to hold our attention. In the first place, how do we stand socially—and financially? Wait, please, I am about to tell you something concerning myself."

"Not the story of your life?"

"Not exactly. But, pray, do not interrupt. I am 31, in good health, no serious habits, fairly good looking, measurably ambitious and something of a favorite where I am best known. I have a comfortable situation in connection with a down town office, and there is a neat little sum lying to my credit in a certain bank. I think I might even compass the cost of a modern cottage."

That's nice, she said. "I have a little balance in a bankbook myself."

"That's nice, too," said the man. "Do you think it would cover the cost of the furniture?"

"If carefully invested," said the girl, "I think it would."

"I am glad of that the man commented. "I never believe in adopting the installment plan where you can raise the cash. And now be equally frank and tell me about yourself."

"No," said the girl. "I'm too much prejudiced in favor of the subject. Let's hear your opinion."

"All right," said the man. "But, of course, I'm prejudiced too. At the same time it is a good thing to air one's prejudices occasionally. If our prejudices do not agree, pray correct me from time to time. To begin with, you are beautiful. Then you are fairly intelligent. You have a nimble wit, but you have been somewhat spoiled. Eh, you don't like that? Nevertheless it is quite evident that your employers have been too indulgent. Oh, yes, they have. And yet one who really—admired you could overlook this—shall I say painful?—defect in time."

"Is that all?"

"All! I could dilate on your attractions until the gray fingers of the dawn beckoned me away."

"How nicely you express yourself! I had only to shut my eyes to hear the surf beat on the shore and the band softly thrumming on the hotel piazza."

"What a lovely time we had—while it lasted! How those golden moments scuttled through pleasure's hourglass!"

"There you go again. But we did have a lovely time deceiving each other, didn't we?"

"It was our foolish vanity that did the deceiving. Our hearts were as true as steel."

"Steel is very hard, Mr. Thingamy."

"Mine is ductile steel, Miss Whatsyourname. 'Tis a heart of wax when thou art near. And your face is the only impression it bears."

"[illegible] duly that impression would soon be obliterated."

"No, no, it is indelible. And if I only knew your name how delightful it would be to make love to you!"

The girl made a quick gesture of dissent.

"You would take altogether too much time," she said. "I shudder to think of your verbosity if you had a three syllable name to encourage your efforts. Besides, you must remember that this is my night in."

"Your night in?"

"Yes, it's my night to have company and to receive in—or him—in this particular apartment. All the other help go out in order to leave the lucky one a clear field. My chance doesn't come again for ten days. But that will not excuse me for overdoing the present opportunity. You really must go. I fancy I hear foot-steps now. Hush!"

The footsteps came down the hall. They paused and the door opened. An elderly man with a heavy white mustache looked in.

"Oh, there you are, Grace!" he cried. "Excuse me. I didn't know you had company. Bless my soul if it isn't Warren Hayes! How are you, my boy? I didn't know Grace knew you. Helping her with private theatricals, I see. Don't let her work you too hard. There, there, I won't interrupt any longer. Glad to see you at any time, my boy."

"I'll drop in on you at the office in the morning," said Warren Hayes. "I have a little important business I want to see you about."

"All right, my boy. Any time after 10. Good night."

"Good night."

There was a little silence. The man looked at the girl. The girl looked at the floor.

"I was silently admiring the way your father says Grace," remarked Warren Hayes.

"Come," said the girl sharply, "what is that special business you have with papa to-morrow morning?"

"And here I've been openly crediting you with unusual cleverness," said Warren Hayes, with a despairing gesture. "Yet I fancy you half suspect. The fact is, Miss Grace Ainslie, alias Thingamy, that when a young woman admits her devoted admirer through the side door it is about time for papa's consent to be asked."

"You are a rude and hasty man," said the girl. "And I suppose you are just conceited enough to fancy that you will succeed with the father as well as—I mean that you hope to succeed with the daughter as well as you think you'll succeed with the father."

"Exactly," said Warren Hayes.

The girl looked at him with a little scowl.

"Well," she said, "you'll not get in the side door again."

"Oh, the front door will do," said Warren Hayes.

And then the girl softly laughed.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Education in Porto Rico.

The expense of maintaining schools in Porto Rico is very high, if we consider the amount spent for the small number of pupils enrolled; but as that country is gradually brought in closer touch with our own, their system will evidently be changed, until it reaches our present state of perfection. In this country the people are being educated to the fact, that there is a sure cure for dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and that medicine is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It should be taken at the very first symptoms, if you would avoid unnecessary suffering. It will give prompt relief and eventually cure, as hundreds of people, including many prominent physicians, have testified during the past fifty years.

An Incident of Prairie Life.

Sarah Preston's lips were tightly compressed, and there was a sad look in her eyes. The dust was blotting out from her view more than the flower dotted landscape. It seemed to dim all remembrance of the long days of perfect weather when the prarie seemed an Eden and strength and hope grew large with the fresh bracing air.

Some one came in with a heavy, weary step and stopped a moment on the threshold to look at the drooping figure. Then he approached her with awkward tenderness, laying his toil roughened hands on her shoulder.

"What's the matter, Sarah?" he said softly.

There was a smothered weariness in the tones, but her ears seemed deaf that morning to anything but the wind's piercing voice. Half unconsciously she drew a little away from his hand.

"It's everything," she said, "everything! Why did we ever come here, to such wretchedness as this?"

He did not attempt another caress, except with his anxious eyes, and her face was turned away from them, hidden in her hands.

She would have called after him and clung to him if she could have seen the look on his face as he went out—all the patience and weariness of it.

In just a few minutes he was back at her side.

"Sarah," he said rather anxiously, "what would you say to letting two people come in for a little rest? They've stopped the wagon just a little way from here. She seems a childish young thing, and he looks as if the world had been too much for him, he's so thin and sickly looking. What do you say to bringing them in?"

"Oh, John, how can we, when it's so hard to keep up as it is? But go ask them in. If we can make it a little easier for them, we ought to I suppose."

"You come with me," coaxed John. "Go get your hat, and we'll ask them together."

She gave a little protesting laugh, but went nevertheless, clinging to his arm and almost resting her face sometimes on his shoulder.

They were very near the travelers now. The tired horses, with dejected down-bent heads, were snatching what little rest they could. In the covered wagon sat the man and woman—such a hollow cheeked, large eyed man and such a little slip of a wife! The hot wind flapped the canvas cover and sent whirls of dust over the two occupants and their scanty possessions.

Some of the self pity that had darkened Sarah's face all the morning faded out of it and was replaced by a purer, nobler look.

"You must be tired out," Sarah began without preamble. "We want you to come up to the house for a little rest and to have dinner with us. Won't you?"

A pleased smile breaking over the young wife's face seemed almost to fade out the little worried line between the dark eyes. An answering gleam stole over the worn face at her side, but they both protested faintly. They couldn't give so much trouble. It would not be right.

"You come right along," said John, with kindly authority. "We want you, so don't make any fuss about it. We'll take the horses into my barn. Let 'em try my feed and a good bucket of my well water."

The two men went off together, Sarah and the little wife beating their way back to the sod house. A look of cheer and comfort seemed to be in its brown walls now. "How good it will seem to rest in a house!" said the little wife with a happy sigh.

"Wouldn't you like to lie down a little while till dinner is ready?" said Sarah. "Come right into my room and just [illegible] that you are at home." A pro[illegible] kindliness had sprung up into[illegible] gently, for this little creature with [illegible] eyes. "You must be waiting for me [illegible] fortable! There's cold w[illegible] I wanted pitcher, and I'll bring you so you that No, it isn't a bit of trouble. Then you must rest until dinner."

Unpleasant thoughts were far away as she prepared the dinner, trying to make it as attractive as possible. She would get out some of her wedding china. Why not? John would enjoy a bright spot in the day for the strangers[illegible] even picked a bunch of astragalu[illegible] ing a centerpiece of the white, [illegible] leaves. A sprig of wild geranium [illegible] laid at each plate.

There were cheery fa[illegible] round the table, and Sarah's was [illegible] bright than the faces of the oth[illegible]

The gaunt stranger sat a little mor[illegible] erect now, and his face after even this brief rest seemed less sharply outlined. The warm, human kindness as well as the outward comfort had wrought the change and in some way made it easier to remember in whose larger protecting care they were and would still be when rolling over the brown prairie. Bit by bit their story came out. The man told how he had been a carpenter and builder in Iowa what a happy little home it had been, and why they were flying now to the untried world of Colorado, that Mecca for consumptives. The guant man and the young wife avoided the dread word. They said instead, "People with any sort of lung trouble."

As they went back to the sitting room John and Sarah talked cheerily of the prospective home in Colorado and brought out a book of views of the wonderful scenery. The guant man and his wife bent over them with keen interest. "It will be a great move for us," he said. "It seemed to be the only thing for us to do, and I'm glad we're so nearly there. I feel more heartened up to-day than any time since we started. We won't forget your kindness, I can tell you."

"Oh, pshaw!" said John, and "Don't speak of it," said Sarah in a breath, "It's been so pleasant for us to have you!"

It was necessary to take up the journey again. The two men went out to the barn together.

The eyes of the little wife sought Sarah's. "You have been so good," she said, almost in a whisper, "so good to take us in. This awful dust and the heat—I wouldn't have minded them so much for myself, but it has been so bad for him. It makes the cough worse and that always frightens me. All these days that we have been on the way I have been longing so to reach Colorado. I have felt as if I couldn't wait, when the waiting must mean everything to him, and it has been so hard, so almost impossible, to keep cheerful before him! That is always very hard—don't you think so—when your life is all wrapped up in somebody else's, to keep that one from feeling how you suffer? And of course if they knew, that would make it all the worse."

How the poor young thing was emptying her heart out! It was as if all the grief and anxiety of the days in the covered wagon, rolling over the brown plains, had burst their bounds and must pour themselves out to this listener.

"I wanted you to know," the excited little voice ran on, "how kind you have been—what a comfort it has been to me!

THE POOR DIRECTORS.

At a meeting of the Directors of the Poor, attended by the Republican member, J. Edw. Schriver, and a Democratic member, John A. Rockwell, yesterday, it was decided to publish the Alms-house account next month in the Star and Sentinel and the Adams County Independent, two Republican newspapers. This arrangement was proposed by Mr. Rockwell, if we are correctly informed, and was agreed to by Mr. Schriver. They seem to have been acting under instructions, however, as the discussion of the subject was not carried on by the members, but by other persons present.

It is the first time in the history of our county that a public board has attempted to deny the Democratic people their rights; this action being intended, we believe, as an affront not only to the COMPILER, but as well to every Democrat who has opposed the political ring in control of the Alms-house.

It is our intention, however, to seek to avoid the accomplishment of this purpose as far as possible by requesting a copy of the account and publishing it free of charge at the usual time.

EASTERN FARMING.

Our neighbor, the Chambersburg Repository, expresses the following opinion of eastern farming as compared with that in the western states:

While the price of farm land now in the east is remarkably low it is not probable that the low price will become permanent. The opening up of vast territories in the west has had much to do with the depreciation of farm land in the east, but the west has now about run its course. There is no longer the strong inclination to go west that existed a few years ago, for the reason that that section has not developed as satisfactorily as had been anticipated. It has been discovered that the matter of irrigation, which is invariably necessary west of the Missouri river, has proved an exceedingly expensive item in the agricultural pursuit of that section of the country. It is not only expensive as an item of first cost but is expensive to maintain. This has been found a great barrier to the progress of farming in the west, and has caused a general feeling among tillers of the soil that the east after all has more and better advantages than the west.

Farm land is now higher there than it is here, making the burden greater upon the western farmer than upon the eastern one. The former has been enabled, in the past, to reap a large revenue, owing to the difference in price of land, but this no longer exists. In fact it is reversed while the taxes are now about equal. This being the case the advantages seem to be in favor of the eastern farmer and will continue to increase from year to year.

Naturally the eastern farmer has been discouraged recently. The price of land declining and with it the price of the farm products has been a source of great inconvenience. This has led many to believe, especially among the young men, that there is no revenue to be derived from farming. So, many of the rising generation are turning their attention to other pursuits. This is making the question of farm help a serious one, and many land owners in Pennsylvania complain that they can no longer obtain croppers. * that with the west practically supplied, as take available farm land is concerned, over each. Y and for tenants in the east, The necy not although the young men tion of ate their attention to farming w a brighter prospect before them than they ever had.

Having passed the ordinance granting the right of way to the Chambersburg and Gettysburg electric railway company over borough streets, our citizens will watch with interest the movements of the projectors of the trolley scheme. The in step in order, after the burgess shall the ordinance, will be its acceptance the company and the filing of a bond $20,000 for the protection of the municipality.—Chambersburg Valley Spirit.

In the course of a debate in congress, Wednesday, Congressman T. M. Mahon, of Chambersburg, announced boldly that the farmers of this state know more about agriculture than the people in the department at Washington. He opposed an amendment offered by Mr. Latimer (S. C.) to increase the appropriation for printing farmers' bulletins and declared that the members supporting it did so in order to make themselves popular with their constituents.

State Printing Contract Let.

The contract for the State printing and binding for the next four years beginning July 1, was allotted on Friday by Secretary of the Commonwealth Griest to W. Stanley Ray, of Mercer, the present contractor, at his bid of 88.01 per cent. off the maximum price.

Milton H. Plank, of Harrisburg, who bid 89.02 per cent. off when the bids were opened three weeks ago, withdrew his bid by permission of Mr. Griest, and, as Mr. Ray was the next lowest, he was given the contract.

THE LEGISLATURE.

AN APPORTIONMENT BILL—ADAMS AND YORK THE 21ST DISTRICT—GENERAL BUSINESS OF THE LEGISLATURE—VARIOUS BILLS INTRODUCED.

Senator Grady on Tuesday introduced, in the Senate, the new congressional apportionment bill. It is in part as follows:

The 19th district shall consist of the counties of Dauphin, Cumberland and Lebanon.

The 21st district shall consist of the counties of York and Adams.

The anti-vaccination people have sent in a bill through Mr. Smyth, of Philadelphia, to repeal the requirement that principals and others in charge of public schools shall refuse admission to any child without a physician's certificate as to either successful vaccination or having had smallpox.

Bills to provide for the centralization of schools and the establishment of township high schools; permitting owners and lessees of lands to kill deer and other game on their property in all seasons; disqualifying tax collectors from succeeding themselves in office were also brought out of committee.

Among the bills introduced were:

Providing that screens and all obstructions shall be removed from all hotels, restaurants and other places where liquors are licensed to be sold, and a failure to comply with the proposed acts shall be grounds for the revocation of any license.

Prohibiting the placing of material of all kinds on improved country roads, interfering with the gutters and water courses of the road, injuring or defacing bedded macadam pavement of the road, excavating, digging, obstructing or tearing up any portion of the roadway, and declaring the offense of so doing to be a misdemeanor punishable by a fine of not more than $100 or three months' imprisonment.

Providing that no buildings shall be erected hereafter upon any disused burial ground in any city except for the purpose of enlarging a church, meeting house or other place of religious worship.

CROMWELL ENTERTAINMENT.

Two Excellent Performances Given by Mrs. H. E. Monroe, Assisted by Local Talent.

"Civil Rights and Religion in the Days of Oliver Cromwell" given by the originator, Mrs. H. E. Monroe, of Philadelphia, assisted by an able cast of local talent, in Xavier Hall last Monday and Tuesday evenings was a complete success. Mrs. Monroe's lecture, the stereopticon views, tableaux, marches and various scenes were all alike pleasing, as was evinced by the interest and enthusiasm displayed by the audience throughout the entire performances.

During the past week we heard many words of praise and commendation and we have no hesitancy in pronouncing the entertainment one of the best of the kind ever presented to the people of Gettysburg.

Miss S. Ethel Brown proved herself a trainer of more than ordinary intelligence and ability, and to her more than anyone else, must the credit for the excellence of the performance be given. During her short stay here she made many friends who will always be glad to hear of her success.

The evening's entertainment opened with a well-executed allegorical processional in which Puritans, Scotish Soldiers, Halberdiers and Cavaliers, to the number of 104, took part. The intricacy of the drill, combined with the costumes worn by the participants, presented a beautiful scene.

The programme was continued by Mrs. Monroe's lecture on the "Story of Cromwell and Charles I of England," with various stereopticon views.

In the scene which followed a number of students of Cambridge University were represented as discussing the merits of the religious sects of the day, the discussion ending with avowals by Oliver Cromwell and John Hampden to devote their lives to the bringing about of religious liberty in England.

Mrs. Monroe continued her lecture with a description of Star Chamber methods, House of Lords, House of Commons, The Westminster Assembly and the arrest, trial, conviction and execution of the Earl of Strafford.

Then followed the Parliament scene in which Charles I presented himself before that body, the like of which had never before been done by any King. A stormy scene followed in which King Charles and his followers made their exit from the Parliament buildings. Oliver Cromwell then swears to lead the Puritans on to victory or die in the attempt.

Mrs Monroe continued her lecture on the downfall of Charles I and his execution, and the ascendancy of Cromwell's power.

The climax was reached in the Lord Protector's scene, when Cromwell, with the members of his family, received a committee from Parliament, the object of the visit being to persuade him to accept the title of King, which he persistently refused to do. The Ministers from foreign countries were also received in the scene.

Mrs. Monroe concluded her talk by a clever and interesting portrayal of Cromwell's later life. The evening's program was concluded with a march of peace.

Wm. F. Dill, Esq., as Cromwell, the most conspicuous character in the play, delighted the audience by his masterful conception and execution of the part assigned him. The cast throughout could not have been better.

In choosing Gettysburg as the place for the presentation of this, her latest production, to the public for the first time, Mrs. Monroe paid a high tribute to the ability of our local talent and we are of the belief that her confidence was not misplaced.

The total receipts amounted to $242.50, half of which was retained by the Mite Society of St. James Lutheran church under the auspices of which the entertainment was gotten up. Their expenses amounted to about $60, leaving a net profit of between $60 and $70. The Mite Society desires us to extend their thanks to all who took part.

FARMERS' ASSOCIATION.

Various Subjects of Interest Discussed by the Members.

The Adams County Farmers' Association met in the Court-house on Saturday, Feb. 9th. The meeting was called to order by the president. Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. After the transaction of some routine business the program was taken up.

The first subject, "Benefit of Fruit Growers' Union and how to organize the same," was assigned to C. L. Longsdorff, who said in part: We do not need so much a fruit growers' union as a fruit growers' association, to learn how to grow the best fruit, the most of it, and at the least possible cost. Adams county is an apple-growing county. The more we produce, the more attraction for buyers. If the apple-men of Adams county had been organized they might have secured better prices for their apples the last season. The prices received were not what they should have been considering the short crop. A fruit grower must be somewhat of a scientist and an everlasting fighter. A fruit growers' association should be separate from, but not conflict with farmers' associations.

D. P. Forney said the remarks made by Mr. Longsdorff deserve the serious consideration of the people of Adams county, when it is known that apples sent by Mr. A. I. Weidner to the Paris Exposition carried off first prize. The people of the county should organize, establish barrel factories and cold storage houses. He advised farmers to be up and doing. Mr. Heyser added a few remarks.

The second topic "Are Holsteins more profitable to farmers than Jerseys?" was continued to next meeting.

"What shall we grow for plant food?" was discussed by H. D Bream, D. P. Forney, Cyrus Griest, R. B. Myers, C. L. Longsdorff, P. L. Houck, Wm. Heyser and Aaron Sheely. C. L. Longsdorff said crimson clover does well if conditions are right. Cow peas will give more plant food but necessitate the loss of another crop. He recommended the genuine southern cow pea. Mr. Heyser thought if sowed last of May or beginning of June on corn stubble the tops could be taken for hay. The roots would give considerable plant food. The ground could then be cultivated and sown to wheat without plowing. R. B. Myers said he had some experience with them and thought they could be grown on poor land. P. L. Houck said he had grown some last year. They were wonderful growers, but hard to plow under.

"Will the Fyre Ship-Subsidy Bill, if enacted, benefit the farmer," the next topic, was assigned to D. P. Forney.

The last topic "Has a commercial fertilizer trust been organized, if so what is the character of it?" The party to whom this subject was assigned being absent Mr. Forney was called upon. He said there has been a trust formed, but owing to late discoveries of enormous phosphate deposits the trusts have not been able to control it. Mr. Griest said that one of the hopeful things about it was that Mr. Armour, of Chicago, who controls a large amount of fertilizer material bone, blood, etc., is not in the trust and is able to fight it. At this point the discussion drifted to the use of fertilizer. Mr. Forney said he had raised better wheat with the use of commercial fertilizer than some of his neighbors who depend on manure made by feeding steers. Manure from corn fed stock is not as good as manure from nitrogenous feed. C. L. Longsdorff, Cyrus Griest, H. D. Bream and Aaron Sheely added some remarks.

On motion Association adjourned to meet March 9th. SEC.

IMPORTANT TELEPHONE MOVE.

The Local Companies of Western Maryland, Winchester, Va., and York and Adams Counties, to be United and Connected With Baltimore.

The building of a long distance telephone line connecting Baltimore city with the several independent telephone lines of Western Maryland and adjacent Pennsylvania and Virgina territory is approaching culmination. Last evening a week, by invitation of President Webb, of the Maryland Telephone Company of Baltimore, representatives of the several independent companies of Western Maryland, Winchester, Va., and Adams and York counties, Pa., met the representatives of the Maryland Telephone Company in the Exchange building of the latter Company in Baltimore. The preliminaries for a combination of all the companies were agreed upon, and arrangements made for an early commencement of the work. The understanding is that the combination shall in no wise interfere with the local business of any of the companies, but has sole reference to the business between the distinct corporations. The indications are that the line will be ready for business by the first of May, next.—Westminster Democratic Advocate.

Pius A. Miller informs us that while none of the directors of the local company were present, it is the purpose of the company to join, with the other companies mentioned, the movement. The ultimate object of the proposed movement is to connect Baltimore and Pittsburg by a long distance telephone line. This, will of course, give the Adams County Company the advantage of a long felt want—long distance communication.

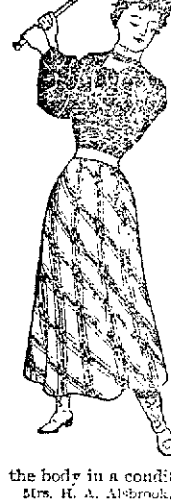
The Golf Girl

Is the type of the modern woman at her healthiest and best. She walks with an easy grace. She is a picture of perfect womanhood in the springtime of life. But generally the golf club is laid aside with marriage. A physical languor oppresses the once athletic girl. Exercise makes her back ache. She tires easily. Usually she accepts this condition as a natural thing, but it is unnatural. Marriage should add to woman's happiness, rather than subtract from it. If women understood how intimately the general health is related to the local health of the womanly organs, they would appreciate the fact that there is no need to suffer from weakness and backache. The use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong, sick women well. It regulates the periods, heals inflammation and ulceration, cures female weakness, and puts the body in a condition of sound health.



Mrs. H. A. Alsbrook, of Austin, Lonoke Co., Ark., writes: "After five months of great suffering with female weakness I write for the benefit of other sufferers from the same affliction. I doctored with our family physician without any good results so my husband urged me to try Dr. Pierce's medicines which I did, with wonderful results. I am completely cured. I took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, four of his 'Golden Medical Discovery' and two vials of his 'Pleasant Pellets.'"

THE 60 DAY Slaughter Sale

is now going on at our STORE.

Our reasons for the extra cut are:

We are anxious to dispose of the Stock before our Spring Goods come in; the mild weather, and the backwardness of the season.

To itemize would consume too much space, therefore, if you want to save money, we would advise you to call and personally examine our line of

also our complete stock of—SHOES, FELTS and RUBBERS.

During the past week our clerks have not been able to handle the trade satisfactorily, but we have made special arrangements for the accomodation of the large crowd expected during Court week.

Remember 60 DAYS of SLAUGHTER. Everything at half. First come, first served. Come one, come all.

RURAL DELIVERY NOTES.

W G Smith, Route Inspector Rural Free Delivery, 2nd U S District, has been inspecting the various routes in our county during the past week Routes Nos 2, 4 and 5 from Gettysburg and the two routes with headquarters at Fairfield were gone over last week Mr Smith expects, during the coming week, to go over the routes leading out from this place after which he will go to Littlestown

Routes Nos 2 and 5 were found to be too long and it is probable that this will eventually result in the formation of other routes in the county

Mr Smith expressed himself as being well pleased with the efficiency of the service in Adams, but found that a number of boxes did not come up to the Government requirements For the benefit of our readers we publish these requirements

"Patrons of Rural Mail Routes are expected to provide secure, weatherproof mail boxes, placed near the highway, in such a location that the carrier can conveniently reach them to deposit and collect the mail without dismounting You must supply a suitable box or replace the unsafe one now in use

"Unless this request is complied with, within a reasonable time the Rural Free Delivery Service will be withdrawn from your residence "

By order of the First Assistant Postmaster General

Petitions requesting the rural free delivery service have been sent to the Department from residents of York Springs, Heidlersburg, East Berlin, Hampton, Arendtsville, McKnightstown, Orrtanna and vicinity

Postmaster Young on Saturday by order of the Department at Washington, closed the post office at Red Land. Hereafter the patrons will be supplied by rural carriers from Littlestown

KINDS OF FERTILIZER.

COMPLETE MANURE PHOSPHATES BONE MEAL NITOGEN COMPOUNDS ETC

The leading kinds of fertilizers are classified and described as follows by Professor Kedzie of the Michigan station.

First—Complete manure, which contains nitrogen in some combination such as a salt of ammonia, nitrate of soda or organic nitrogen, potash as muriate or sulphate (German stassfurth salts) or wood ashes, phosphoric acid as a sulphate of lime It is called a complete manure because it contains all of the three materials most essential for plant growth and most likely to be deficient in a field after long cropping

Second—Plain phosphate which may be in the form of superphosphate soluble in water or solution of citrate of ammonia, these being called available because they are readily taken up by roots of plants and ground phosphate rock an insoluble form The bone phosphate and rock phosphate are changed into superphosphate by the action of sulphuric acid removing a part of the lime as sulphate The soluble phosphate is especially beneficial to plants in the early stage of their growth giving them a good start In later stages of growth, when the plant by its roots can forage for food in the soil, the insoluble phosphate may have nearly as beneficial an effect

Third—Phosphates promote the formation of flowers and fruit and secure early ripening They may be wisely used on vines and succulent fruits that are liable to be cut by early frosts in autumn, securing early crops with better prices and avoiding the loss of the entire crop by untimely frosts before most of the crop had ripened Fruit trees sometimes blossom year after year without producing fruit This is often caused by storms at the flowering period, but it may be caused by constitutional weakness in consequence of which pollen of vital power is not formed In such cases the use of active phosphates is worthy of trial

Bonemeal contains phosphate of lime and animal matter rich in nitrogen and hence is very valuable for manure where we desire a prolonged influence It is well adapted to grass lands and is free from the bad odors often given off by mixed fertilizers Most meadows are benefited by a dressing of bonemeal If the bones that now adorn the back yard and pasture lot should be ground into a powder and scattered on a crop worn field, the results would surprise some farmers

Fourth—Potash manure The best and cheapest is that neglected home product, wood ashes These contain an average of 5 per cent of potash besides a sensible amount of phosphate and a very large amount of carbonate of lime and magnesia They are an all around plant manure so far as mineral matter is concerned supplying each gas element

Unless the farmer can bring into active form the great store of potash in his soil he will then have to buy the German potash salts, the muriate or sulphate These salts are yearly coming into greater prominence as potash fertilizers, but their sale in Michigan in separate form has not been large

The influence of potash on plant life is masterful, no plant can grow without it, and its influence in developing the carbohydrates and maturing fruits is marked and apparently controlling

Fifth—Nitrogen compounds Nitrogen is the bottled wine of the vegetable feast If the term stimulant can be applied to any organization destitute of a nervous system, then nitrogen is the stimulant of plant life In any of its combined forms it gives depth of color and exuberance of growth to vegetable [illegible] and when in abundant supply it [illegible] plant to break forth into riot [illegible] The great reservoir of nitrogen is the air, but the leaves of plants, though constantly bathed in nitrogen, cannot drink in a particle It is only nitrogen in combination that can be appropriated by the plant, and this enters the plant by the roots and comes from the soil A small amount is brought to the soil by the rain washing out the ammonia and nitrates of the air but the amount is not large and entirely inadequate to supply a crop

A large amount of active nitrogen in the form of nitrates is yearly formed in every well cultivated field and this is the cheapest way of securing a supply of this costliest element of plant growth The raising of leguminous crops like the clovers, is the next cheapest way of securing a supply

Combined nitrogen is purchased in three forms—salts of ammonia and nitrate of soda and organic nitrogen in the form of dried blood, fish scraps, cottonseed meal, etc

Sixth—Tankage is a complex and variable material obtained from the waste residues at the slaughter houses, the garbage collected by the scavengers in cities, etc These materials are dried, the grease extracted in tanks, and this tankage, by itself or mixed with phosphates potash, etc, is sold as a fertilizer It is mainly used to give bulk to the concentrated fertilizers made from bone and rock phosphate

About ten minutes later she remarked

"Thank you, sir I would have said it sooner, but the last man I thanked for giving up his seat in a crowded car had only got up because he wanted to get off the car and I felt that he had won my gratitude under false pretense I made up my mind I wasn't going to let it happen again"

AN INCIDENT OF PRAIRIE LIFE.

Don't you see how much less tired he looks? And he hasn't coughed near so much, not near! You have helped us up too It has been so strange—all this journey—every day taking us further away from home, and this trying to keep down the homesickness—and—" She broke off short with grateful tude and tears shining in her eyes

There was just time for Sarah to take the little brown hand in hers and press it close when the two men came back

The man with stooping shoulders and the flush on either cheek went up close to the little woman with bright eager eyes

"Well little woman are you ready?" he said patting her shoulder "You've had a fine rest haven't you?" He coughed sharply as he spoke but she smiled up at him brightly that he might not know how much more it racked her chest than his

"You'd better get on your bonnet, little woman," he said, "it's time we were going I don't know how we're to thank you and your wife Mr Gilbert for all you've done for us but we feel it, sir, we feel it"

It wasn't anything at all" John protested "It has done us good to have you here"

Sarah and the little young wife went into the tiny bedroom together The wind had stopped its maddening song outside and the air was clean again from its burden of dust The furniture would have to be dusted for the third time that day but the thought brought no scowl on her forehead now The little traveler pinned on the rusty black hat and turned to hold out both hands impulsively to Sarah

"Thank you again, she said, and then in a whisper "Colorado is a wonderful place isn't it? Haven't you heard about the way people get cured there—people just as bad off as George or worse? You feel sure it will do him good don't you?"

She searched Sarah's face as if to read her fate there It was hard to meet the girlish eyes

"I've never been farther west than this myself" she said "but every one says it's a wonderful climate in Colorado for people with trouble with their lungs I'm so glad you're going there, and when he's grown well and strong you'll be coming back to see us?"

The delight of that possible future was in the young wife's eyes "If he only does!" she said

There were hearty hand clasps exchanged a few minutes later Then the prairie schooner, with its freight of human love and anxieties, rolled slowly away The two left behind in the little sod house stood at the window till the wagon was seen, a dark blot, above the sharp horizon With a quick impulsive movement, Sarah's hand stole into her husband's

"How good you are!" she said almost solemnly "And while I have you what do I care about other things?"

Far off in the big wagon a little woman sat with her round cheek pressed against a shabby coat sleeve and the cry of her heart was like that of Sarah "What are other things?" she was whispering "while I have you dear?"—[illegible]
